TRANSFORM VAT & GST DETERMINATION AND COMPLIANCE

The need to expand globally has never been greater, more complex, or costly. With rates of 20% or more, managing cost, dealing with local rules and language, and meeting new filing requirements requires country-specific expertise. While every business has its own unique in-house process regarding global tax compliance, common issues are:

- The necessity for country-specific tax expertise and content.
- Data integrity.
- Regulatory and business risk management.
- Business system flexibility to meet changing regulation.
- Financial system globalisation and localisation.

There are growing regulatory and professional business risks for companies that get it wrong. These include the concept of 'reasonable care' — which under U.K. legislation could result in tax penalties — and the emphasis on a company to establish and maintain appropriate tax accounting controls. Many companies find that their tax experts are consumed by managing the manual aspects of the compliance process rather than adding value to the business. Developing in-house solutions can be expensive, problematic, and outside of strategic core activity. In addition, maintaining up-to-date content and tracking key changes in tax regimes across multiple jurisdictions is arduous.

Thomson Reuters can help you address these issues with ONESOURCE Indirect Tax software.

- Increased data integrity from numerous data sources.
- Facilitated focus on planning and adding value.
